FILM BEAUTY RECEIVES THREATS AGAINST LIFE

Patsy O'Day, Belle Of Hollywood Colony, Is Target Of Terrorism; Drives Intruders From Home With Gun; Police Puzzled

HOLLYWOOD, Oct. 13.—"You'll be found face down with a bullet in your heart some day," this message, made anonymously over the telephone to Patsy O'Day, film beauty, two weeks ago started a mysterious campaign of terrorism that climaxed early today when her husband, C. J. Joynt, millionaire contractor, drove off three men in a gun battle back of his hillside home.

Officers were searching the city for the trio believed to have plotted to kidnap Miss O'Day for ransom. This was the only motive Joynt could advance for the threats made against Miss O'Day.

Shortly after the first threat was made Miss O'Day, with a gun, drove an intruder from the patio of her residence, and one night last week Joynt and Miss O'Day returned home to find their garage had been broken into and an attempt made to enter the house.

Police were investigating a report that a disappointed suitor had annoyed Miss O'Day.

Miss O'Day, one of the belles of the motion picture colony, married Joynt eighteen months ago after breaking an engagement to a millionaire Los Angeles cafe owner.

Most Powerful Criminal Tried On Macaroni Bill

(Editor's Note: The following article was written by Miss Margaret Lane, formerly of the staff of the London Daily Express, after a week spent at the sessions of the trial of Al Capone for income tax evasion. It sets forth some of the reactions of this noted English woman writer to the picture presented by the trial of America's most publicized gangster.)

CHICAGO, Oct. 13.—I have sat behind Al Capone in the Chicago federal court every day now for a week. I am familiar with six of his suits, two of his overcoats, a selection of pearly white hats, and the neat way his blue-shaven neck rolls over the back of his collar.

I am also learning gradually, listening to lengthy cross-examination and the whispered testimony of witnesses, just what he pays for his shirts, how many ties he buys at a time, what his macaroni bill was in 1928 and how many Chinese lampshades he has bought for his mother.

For this is the sort of evidence that is being piled up against the most powerful criminal figure of modern times.

He is not charged with gang killings, because, somehow, these killings are difficult to place. He is not charged with bootlegging, because, after all, who is going to complain?

Killing, bootlegging, robbery, terrorism—gangsters never pretend that their lives are honestly made. They only avoid the ignominy of being found out. That is why they are tried for evasion of income tax, in place of more sinister things. That is why nothing is said in the evidence of any criminal deeds. It is all very refined. The state is finding out that Capone is a millionaire, and, being utterly too genteel to inquire how those millions were made, prosecute him for not giving the state his proper share.

If it had not been for the dark figure of Capone, sitting in the center of the court with his gunman D'Andrea at his elbow, the trial, which has already dragged on for a week, would be as dull as a legal wrangle between tradesmen. Only the consciousness that this trivial charge is a desperate substitute for something else electrifies the court, and makes the jury consider every trumpery bit of expenditure evidence as if it were bloodstains and fingerprints.

Capone himself emanates a mysterious kind of magnetism that keeps the trial alive. It is impossible to ignore it. I am to be opening with my mind quite rigidly set against the man whose criminal operations have spread a net of terror and vice over Chicago. Now, after sitting for a week with him in range of his ingenious smile and ingratiating glance, I have to confess to a fellow feeling. I understand now what is the cause of the romantic-dangerous legend that can grow up around a thug.

Considering that Capone is Chicago's arch-enemy, the charge and the testimony which is bringing him to trial are pure Gilbert and Sullivan. Hours daily are spent in telling the jury how much he spends on meat, cakes and flowers. It all goes to prove the important point that Al Capone is well able to pay income tax, and so is doubtless of great value. . . . But I have wondered when Al turned his chair round a little and whispered into D'Andrea's ear and they both chuckled under their hands, whether the two gangsters were seeing the joke of the business.

Yesterday the testimony ran largely to Al's silk shirts. We learned that he pays as much as $30 for them, and has his monogram embroidered on the left forearm. That he buys his ties twenty-eight at a time and pays $5 each for them. That he remembers his mother from time to time with $1,000 worth of Chinese rugs or a little gift of a dozen standard lamps. The evidence looked very damning when it came up that the gangster was in the habit of paying $1 apiece for his handkerchiefs. Compared with that, gambling dens

CREDIT POOL WILL PASS ON REQUEST FOR AID NEXT WEEK

Huge Corporation Is Nearly Ready To Function

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Organized with unprecedented rapidity, the huge National Credit Corporation was so well under way today its sponsors predicted it would begin early next week to pass on applications from banks asking aid.

The $500,000,000 credit pool, formed in accordance with President Hoover's outline, was to apply for incorporation papers in Dover, Del. today.

Mortimer N. Buckner, chairman of the organization committee, announced the twelve directors chosen for the corporation would hold their first meeting Saturday. Earlier action was prevented only by the fact that not all directors would have time to reach New York before then.

Buckner said following organization and election of officers—they will come from among the directors—the first assessment would be levied immediately on member banks. Local associations for the various districts were to be formed at once.

All loans have to be approved by the local committees, Buckner said. He believed the directors would devote time between now and Saturday to selection of men to serve on these local committees, so appointments may be made immediately after the meeting.

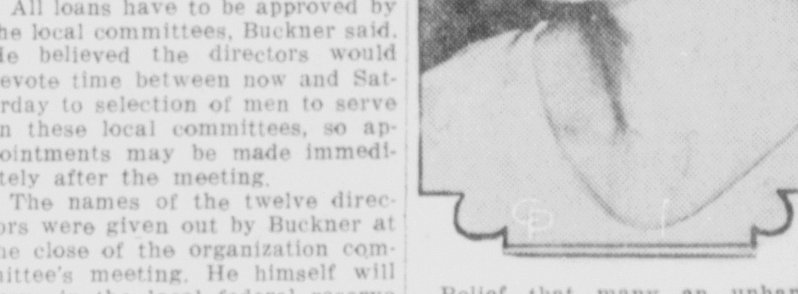

The names of the twelve directors were given out by Buckner at the close of the organization committee's meeting. He himself will serve in the local federal reserve district.

The directors are:

District No. 1—Daniel G. Wing, chairman, First National Bank, Boston; District No. 2, Mortimer N. Buckner, chairman, New York Trust Co.; District No. 3, Livingston E. Jones, president First National Bank, Philadelphia; District No. 4, Arthur E. Braun, president, Farmers' Deposit National Bank, Pittsburgh; District No. 5, John M. Miller, Jr., president, First and Merchants' National Bank, Richmond; District No. 6, John K. Otley, president, First National Bank, Atlanta; District No. 7, Geo. M. Reynolds, chairman executive committee Continental Illinois Bank and Trust Co., Chicago.

District No. 8, Walter W. Smith, president, First National Bank, St. Louis; District No. 9, Edward W. Becker, president, Northwestern National Bank, Minneapolis; District No. 10, W. S. McClellan, chairman, Commerce Trust Co., Kansas City; District No. 11, Nathan Adams, president, First National Bank, Dallas; District No. 12, Frank B. Anderson, chairman, Bank of California National Association, San Francisco.

POISON DIVORCE

Belief that many an unhappy wife has fed poison to her husband is expressed by Mrs. Loretta Walker Osguthorpe, 18-year-old wife of Thomas Osguthorpe of Ogden, Utah. She confessed to putting strychnine in his coffee because he refused to divorce her, according to police. She was held on $10,000 bail, pending trial.

COMMUNITY CHEST BOARD ORGANIZED FOR COMING DRIVE

Directors Named And Officers Picked; Date Not Set

Reorganization of the board of directors of Xenia's Community Chest organization took place and appointment of the executive and budget committees was made at a meeting of volunteer chest workers Monday night at City Hall when preliminary plans for the city's fourth annual chest campaign were discussed.

The directors are Charles A. Bone, D. W. Cherry, Paul Cox, George Eckert, B. U. Bell, M. L. Wolf, S. N. McMillan, F. R. Wood, Dr. Marshall Best, Frederick Anderson, Mrs. J. A. Ches, E. E. Boxwell, the Rev. H. B. McElroy, A. E. Faulkner, Mrs. C. A. Weaver, W. R. Harner, Emil Eichman, R. O. Wead, Mrs. Elbert Babb, J. H. Whitmer, Fred Lang, C. S. Frazer, Frank McCurran, E. H. Heathman, Dr. B. R. McClellan, Mrs. Lawrence Landaker and Mrs. Charles A. Kelble.

Fred Lang was re-elected chairman of the executive committee with S. N. McMillan as first vice chairman; Paul Cox, second vice chairman; M. L. Wolf, treasurer and George Eckert, secretary. D. W. Cherry and B. U. Bell are the other two committee members.

The chest budget committee, charged with the duty of canvassing the various budgets submitted by local welfare and other agencies deriving financial support from the yearly drive, and setting a goal for the 1931 campaign, will be headed by Miss Sarah Hagar as chairman. Other members are Mrs. J. A. Ches, C. S. Frazer, R. D. Adair, Frank McCurran, Edwin Galloway and W. R. Harner.

A definite date for beginning solicitation has not been decided upon, but the campaign will probably be conducted the latter part of November. Selection of a campaign chairman, a subject that was considered at the meeting Monday night, was deferred until later.

Officials of the chest organization desire above all else to impress upon the public that the forthcoming drive will be deserving of greater support than ever before because the need of charitable organizations will be more urgent.

Chest workers believe, however, that the task of raising money will prove less difficult because of the general realization that sufficient funds must be made available somehow to enable participating organizations to carry on their work properly. Chest drives in other cities are all going "over the top" with a minimum amount of effort, and the Xenia organization is convinced local citizens will give just as generously.

PHANTOM AIRSHIP MAY HAVE BEEN BIRDS

GALLIPOLIS, O., Oct. 13.—An enormous flock of blackbirds flying in zigzag formation that would give the appearance of a blimp was the latest theory set forth today as a solution of the mystery of the phantom dirigible which was reported to have fallen in flames last Saturday afternoon near here.

A flock of blackbirds, it was said, could have settled downward into a valley, in such a way as to give the appearance of a collapsing airship.

Reports of the fallen blimp caused a widespread flurry of excitement around here. Searching parties scoured the district from both land and air but failed to find any trace of a wrecked airship.

PRESIDENT'S SON WILL BE SPEAKER

The Garfield centennial will be observed in connection with the annual founder's day celebration at the college, according to Kenneth I. Brown, president of Hiram College.

President James A. Garfield was the second president of Hiram College.

NEW SERIAL TODAY

"Love Stands By," the Gazette's new serial story, begins today on Page 6.

Cleo Lucas, who wrote the new serial, is a successful young writer whose novel, "Jerry, Take Thee, Joan," won the first prize in the College Humor contest.

"Love Stands By" is an interesting treatment of a fresh and fascinating theme of the love-story type and should make interesting reading for these cool autumn evenings.

A generous opening installment is published today. Turn to Page 6 and start it.

AKRON ON FLIGHT

TIFFIN, O., Oct. 13.—Heading due west, the giant E. S. Navy Dirigible, Akron, passed over Tiffin at 8:30 o'clock this morning, on another speed and dynamic lift test.

FOUR IN FAMILY ARE SLAIN; TWO NEGROES SEIZED AS SUSPECTS

Farmer, Wife And Two Daughters Found Dead In House

BERLIN, Md., Oct. 13.—Slaying of an entire family of four with a shotgun and an axe in their farmhouse along the Berlin-Ocean City highway at Taylorsville led to the seizure today of two Negroes suspected of the gruesome crime.

The Negroes, one a discharged farmhand, Orphan Jones, 60, and the other whose name has been kept secret, were held in the jail of Pocomoke County at Snow Hill. Threats have been made against their lives by aroused farmers.

The victims are: Green Davis, 55, his wife, Iva, 48, and their daughters, Elizabeth, 15, and Mary Lee, 13.

Added with shotgun slugs and their heads battered as it with an ax, the couple and their two young daughters were found in their home late yesterday. Their bodies had been saturated with kerosene and an attempt made to hide the crime by burning the house. Officials believe they were murdered over the weekend.

The discovery was made by two neighbors who immediately notified Sheriff William Purnell and a posse was quickly organized. A search then was started for Jones who had made threats "to get the entire family" after being disengaged by Davis on Wednesday.

IOWA FARMERS FREE PRISONER

Cattle-Test Foes Storm Town Jail

NEW LONDON, Ia., Oct. 13.—More stringent measures in dealing with Iowa's rebellious farmers loomed today as a consequence of the storming of the local jail by 500 embattled cattle owners.

Smashing doors and twisting bars, the mob overran the prison and released Ronald Hart, 29, from his cell. The youth had been arrested for interfering with state veterinarians testing cattle in observance of the disputed bovine tuberculosis test law. He was one of a crowd of farmers who stood about and jeered at the veterinarians and the militia men protecting them.

After liberating Hart the jail storming mob kidnapped Earl Brewer, town marshal, and conducted him out of town where he was released without harm.

Martial law exists in Cedar County, hothed of the farmers' resistance to enforcement of the tuberculosis law.

WATER-FILLED BAG BADLY HURTS MAN

DAYTON, O., Oct. 13.—A paper bag filled with water and dropped from the fourth floor of a Dayton hotel had resulted in concussion of the brain and a possible fracture of the skull to Laird Airy of Atlanta, Ga.

Witnesses said the water-filled paper bag struck Airy squarely on the head with terrific force. Police were unable to determine who dropped the missile from the hotel window.

CLAIMS JOBLESS ARE REFUSING JOBS

ZANESVILLE, O., Oct. 13.—Many people out of work now don't want to work anyway, Chief of Police Joseph Petet said today, and explained why he made the statement.

Seventy-five men, notified by the chief to report for work picking apples under guidance of community chest officials, all scorned his offer, he said.

MUCK LAND PROSPERITY BUBBLE BURSTS; STATE BRINGS SUITS

BUYERS, O., Oct. 13.—The Crawford County muck land prosperity bubble had burst today, and the state was trying to obtain a judgment of $50 for each of seventy-seven families which last fall agreed to pay the Ohio Farms Co. $1,000 for ten acres of muck land on which to grow onions.

Prosecutor J. D. Sears filed the petition, declaring the money would be used for the upkeep of the county's indigent this winter. Attempts to force papers on Arthur F. Willoughby, the company's agent, failed because he is no longer in this section, it was said.

The Ohio Farms Co., a Cincinnati concern, is now in the hands of a receiver, the prosecutor declared.

Payments for the land were to have been made at the end of the onion harvest season, and although the crops have been harvested they have not yet been sold and it is not known whether any of the families will be able to make their first payments.

Mukden, Armed Camp, Far From Scene Of Peace Meet

By EDWARD HUNTER
L. N. S. Staff Correspondent
(Copyright 1931 by L. N. S.)

MUKDEN, Manchuria, Oct. 13.—Six thousand miles removed from the scene of peace efforts at Geneva, Mukden is a theater of war. With telegraph and cable facilities hampered and train service almost paralyzed, Mukden is in effect six times 6,000 miles away from peace.

It is an armed camp. Its streets are barricaded with sand-bags. Its business is at a standstill.

I have walked through Mukden, unmolested, from its southern outskirts, through its hub and to its northernmost extremity.

I have crossed from east to west, inspected the business and factory areas which a few weeks ago thrived with industry and looked into the residential districts which have been changed from havens of rest and peace to streets of fear and despair.

From one extremity of the city to the other, Mukden has become a scene of war preparation. The hub of the metropolis, where on the facades of buildings and shops are seen familiar British and American names, is the most warlike of all.

Sand-bags are piled high, forming efficient barricades for the Japanese troops who patrol it with drawn rifles, glistening with fixed bayonets. Empty gasoline drums, piled on end and strengthened with sandbags, form make-shift but bullet-worthy machine gun emplacements.

In an effort to determine the actual extent of the fighting forces Japan has put into Manchuria to protect the lives and property of her nationals, I interviewed authoritative Japanese sources.

Here I was told that the Japanese troops in Manchuria total 13,600 men. The Chinese, it was said, have a total of 100,000, with 60,000 of this number concentrated at Chinchow, Manchurian headquarters of Governor Chang Hsueh-Liang.

In Mukden, there is one Japanese aviation company. A new Japanese aerodrome has been established at Changchun.

In addition to these regular forces, there is the Japanese volunteer corps recruited from the young men's association. This is an unofficial organization, so its strength has not been tabulated.

ANTI-CHAIN STORE HEARING REJECTED BY SUPREME COURT

Court Still Liberal; Division Remains The Same

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—The liberalism of the supreme court, manifest last June and widely commented upon, was unchanged today after a four-months-recess.

Hopes of advocates of conservative interpretation of the federal constitution that the fall term of court would find the attitude of the justices altered, faded with its refusal to consider the Indiana anti-chain store and other cases.

After observers scanned the court's action in almost 100 petitions on its first decision day, yesterday, it appeared that the division in the court would remain the same during the coming year.

The court now is classed as "liberal" in most cases with Chief Justice Hughes and Associate Justices Holmes, Brandeis, Stone and Roberts frequently standing together in a divided court. The conservative wing of the court is regarded to include Associate Justices McKeeney, Sutherland, Butler and Vandewater.

Thus far no justices have evidenced an intention to resign although five members will be eligible for retirement before next June when they have passed seventy years of age.

Associate Justice Holmes, who will be 91 next March, ranks the court both in age and in length of service. Justices Vandewater, McKeeney, Brandeis and Sutherland all have passed 70 or will before June.

While the court confirmed the wide powers of the state in taxation of chain stores in the Indiana case, it also declared the axes must be reasonable. Three other anti-chain store tax cases are pending in which the court may define the limit of taxation.

The powers of states under the constitution also will be defined in oil conservation cases, where the question of confiscation is raised. Other cases involve the extent to which personal liberty is guaranteed by the basic law.

Anti-prohibitionists found little hope in the court's refusal to consider several petitions, entering, in which the search and seizure clauses of the constitution were involved.

Power of the government to confiscate fixtures in "speakeasies," to take liquor when there is no prosecution and accepting the benefits of an illegal search and seizure by state officers are still to be determined in cases now before the court.

YOUNG COUPLE HELD FOR AUTO STEALING FROM MANY CITIES

Admit Thefts After Arrest While On Camping Tour

NAPOLÉON, O., Oct. 13.—A four-state tour in "borrowed" automobiles today was at an end for Allen McKenna, 29-year-old Niagara Falls youth and his companion, Anna Friendship, 17. Found camping along railroad tracks near here they were given shelter behind the bars of the local jail.

They have confessed, police say, to a long string of auto thefts which started in Niagara Falls, went on through Buffalo, Erie, Pennsylvania and then turned westward into Ohio, including Conneaut, Cleveland, Bellevue, Toledo, Monroe, Michigan was next. The two were held on an auto stealing charge until investigation of a number of gasoline station robberies is made by authorities.

McKenna and the girl were also quoted by police as having admitted they intended to steal a car here and extend their operations into Indiana, with Ft. Wayne, as the next stop.

DEPRESSION IS THE BUNK SAYS TEX

COLUMBUS, O., Oct. 13.—Take it from Texas Guinan—there isn't any depression, and prohibition is what caused it.

The wise-cracking queen of the nightclubs assumed the role of a prophetess today and assured suckers out here in the country that the depression stories are the bunk.

In the next sentence, however, she declared that "the country's serious economic problems" could be solved by repeal of the eighteenth amendment.

WHAT DEPRESSION?

THERE is no depression in the thrifty home—the home that manages its finances properly and knows how to distribute the family income.

Knowing how to stretch the budget has enabled many persons to enjoy their later years in security. These are the kind of people who employ classified ads.

They add to their income by turning articles they no longer need into money by selling them to persons who need them. The classified ads contact the buyer and seller. And many thrifty people augment the family income by renting out that spare room, that extra space in the garage or that empty lot.

Thrifty people take advantage of these opportunities and are classified ads bring thrifty people together.

GAZETTE classified ads have accomplished much toward teaching the lesson of thrift. Have you tried them? Just call 111—an ad taker will take your ad.

SUPPLEMENTS MOVE BY LEAGUE; BRIAND EVOLVES SOLUTION

veloped and the cause of disarmament was doomed, and went on to say that "China was taken unaware" by the Japanese invasion of Mukden on the night of September 17.

China, Dr. Sze said, made no hostile move as a result of this invasion but immediately appealed to the League for intervention.

"China," he declared, "thus gave ample proof of her peaceful intentions. The council then suggested means which although not in accordance with China's desires, were accepted."

"Now those means have failed as China feared."

The means referred to by Dr. Sze consisted of the League's dispatch of formal telegrams to the Chinese and Japanese governments demanding withdrawal of troops and cessation of hostilities.

"Not only has Japan failed to withdraw her troops," Dr. Sze continued, "but there have been further acts of violence and further occupation with destruction of property and loss of civilian lives. For these reasons, China requested this meeting in order to devise means for withdrawal of troops, which is the first imperative act."

"The Kellogg pact and the League of Nations covenant are the cornerstones of a world-wide edifice of peace if the cornerstones crumble, the whole edifice collapses."

"It does not seem possible to China that the Kellogg pact should fall when put to its first real test." During Sze's impassioned address, the delegates listened intently to every word. Kenkichi Yoshizawa, the Japanese delegate, was waiting to present his government's side of the problem, and again expounded the thesis that the dispute can be settled only by direct negotiations.

When Dr. Sze had concluded his address, the council adjourned until 2:30 p. m., when M. Yoshizawa will state his country's case.

HALL CAINE'S LIFE OF CHRIST MAY SEE PUBLICATION SOON

By JOSEPH THOMAS

N. S. Staff Correspondent
LONDON, Oct. 13.—Will the famous work of the late Sir Hall Caine, the "Life of Christ" ever be published.

Although the book is completed and publication in England and America was already contracted for, Sir Hall Caine held back this colossal manuscript until what he considered would be the psychological moment for its liberation.

Following his death everybody is wondering whether he left any instructions for its release. In any case it will be many months before it is issued, as the manuscript totals 3,000,000 words, or about 4,500,000 letters.

His long and painstaking study of the sources of the earthly life of Jesus had brought him to a paradoxical conclusion. He was of the opinion that there was almost nothing recorded of the deeds and words of the most potent personality in history which could be regarded as indubitably authentic. Yet he was convinced of the reality of Christ himself.

It is believed that the "Life of Christ" will cause a stir, both in the literary and religious world, whenever it is published.

WINTER WAISTLINE SLIMMER EVENING GOWN-STYLE SHOW

By ALICE LANGEIER, International News Service Staff Correspondent

PARIS, Oct. 13.—A slim silhouette and a slimmer and trimmer waistline are Fashion's main ingredients for the winter evening gown.

Normally the waist is about where Nature intended it to be, but actually should be placed where it best suits the wearer, either a little lower or a little higher. The essential point is for the waistline to look very small indeed and hip-lines, too, are kept down to an illusion of slenderness, no matter what their actual girth.

Schiaparelli puts the slimmest of waists on a formal evening frock of white peau l'ange satin with a big bow in the center-back falling to a train which can be draped across the front and clipped to the waistline with a jewel. This makes it practical for dancing purposes. The bodice has twisted shoulder straps.

Lelong pinches in a ruby red velvet gown to make a slender and slinky silhouette with a close-fitting sheath to the knees where there is a circular flounce making a train in back. Two puffs hang from the back recall the 1880 bustle.

Nearly all evening gowns, at least the very formal ones, are backless or have a complicated arrangement of straps. There is the deep V-back and some of the designers have tried effects with a wide piece of the material crossing the folds from shoulder to shoulder allowing the back to be seen below. The very newest thing is to make the jewelry a part of the gown, letting the pendant hang from a band of the material.

The business of destroying approximately 150 gallons of intoxicating beverages confiscated in raids conducted by the sheriff's office on warrants issued by Probate Judge S. C. Wright was scheduled to be transacted Tuesday afternoon in the presence of the customary several representative citizens.

The liquor has been accumulating since Sheriff John Baughn assumed office last January 1 and was seized in a total of twenty-four cases in which warrants were issued out of Probate Court. Judge Wright authorized the destruction of the contraband.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him.—Leviticus, xxv, 19.

WHAT HOLDS BACK BUSINESS?

According to the financial experts, the process of deflation of the business conditions created by the speculation and extravagance of previous years, is very well completed, as far as the purely American situation is concerned. About the only thing that delays industrial revival, is uncertainty concerning conditions in foreign lands. Some people are afraid that more countries will go over to bolshevism, and he fear that certain foreign nations may default on the bonds they have sold to American investors, also tends to destroy confidence.

The United States could be fairly prosperous, even if it sold no goods at all in foreign lands. Still, the nations are so closely tied together, that had conditions affect America intimately. First, because they cut down our export trade, and second, because of the sentimental effect. Both hope and fear are contagious. If foreign peoples are fearful and anxious, that sentiment spreads to America.

It is up to the United States government then to do everything it reasonably can to assist foreign nations toward recovery. Our people have already done very much. Our investors and the government have loaned them vast sums of money, perhaps too liberally in some cases.

As respects the debts due to the United States government, these debtors must be treated just as a debtor is treated in business life. If a debtor can't pay, and if his creditors want him to continue in business, they have to scale down his debts, much as they hate to take the loss.

It is up to the United States government to find out what these people really can pay. If they can pay their debts, they should do so. If they really can't pay in full, it is like squeezing blood out of a turnip to try to get it out of them, and the only effect is to delay business recovery.

TO PUT DOWN RACKETEERING

A committee of 1,000 in New York city is starting out on a plan to put down racketeering. They have received 324 complaints of these practices since the committee organized in March, but none of the complainants were willing to testify personally against the extortionists.

It is intolerable that these forms of crookedness can go on. They are extracting millions of dollars from honest people, many of them struggling folks who are fighting hard to get a foothold in the business world.

Some slick crook comes along and tells them that for a certain amount per month, they will get "protection" against possible evils that threaten them. If they come across, they seem to get along all right, but if they don't, their place may be bombed or their employees assaulted, and all kinds of troubles seem to dog them.

Crime can usually be shown up and put down, provided politics does not interfere too much. It may be possible to obtain evidence against the crooks, but sometimes political pulls prevent the just penalty from being imposed. The people of the cities where these practices are common, must insist that politics keeps its hands off.

It is also necessary to spend a good deal of money on inquiries into such schemes. The detectives who investigate such affairs have to take many risks, and their work calls for a high degree of skill and long experience. It is work that should be very highly paid. If the rewards are sufficient, plenty of bold and adventurous men will manage somehow to get the evidence that will show up these crooks, and put a good part of them in jail. This will scare the rest so thoroughly, that they will decide these games are not good for their health.

"WORTH WHILE"

We don't suppose that Mrs. Annie Fellows Johnston, who died at her home, the Beeches, near Louisville, the other day, ever was thought of seriously by the high literary critics who undertake to tell the world which writers really are "worth while." But Mrs. Johnston never needed any indorsement of that sort, for she had a far wider and far more devoted and faithful following than most writers of the pen who are supposed to represent Literature with the most august of big "L's."

Mrs. Johnston wrote "The Little Colonel Stories." And if you do not know what they are, it must be because there are no girls in your home. Several generations of misses in their early 'teens, probably numbering millions, have followed the fortunes of the spirited "Little Colonel," absorbing ideals of conduct and character that have had profound effect upon their lives.

It is told in connection with the announcement of her death that because a child once underwent a major operation without an anesthetic after being promised a set of "The Little Colonel" books, Mrs. Johnston thereafter frequently expressed a feeling that her work had been worth while. We think that a great many other people, parents as well as children, have felt the same way about her books, and for similar reasons.

Don't, however, get the idea that "The Little Colonel" was a "goody goody" girl or anything of that sort. Because she wasn't, or rather isn't, since she still lives, although the child who was her "original" long ago grew up, and her creator has passed into the beyond. "The Little Colonel" is human; she has character; and she is alive. Which are reasons why the 12 books telling about her have been translated into many languages, including Japanese, and are read constantly by multitudes of girls in parts of the world far distant from Old Kentucky.

SENATOR MORROW'S SUCCESSOR

The political affiliation of the late Dwight W. Morrow's successor in the United States senate will determine the political control of that body. Mr. Morrow was a Republican; his successor, if a Republican will not change the lineup from its present strength of 48 Republicans, 47 Democrats, and one Farmer-Laborite.

It is plainly Gov. Morgan F. Larson's duty to make an appointment before congress convenes in December. Governor Larson is a Republican. His Democratic opponent for re-election has removed whatever doubt there might have been about the proper thing to do by announcing that he will not call a special election to fill the seat, if he is elected. This will allow an apprehension which might have complicated Governor Larson's task of appointing someone until an election is held.

The movement started by the Women's Republican club of Ridge-wood, New Jersey, home of the Morrrows, to appoint Mrs. Morrow successor to her late husband is an appealing gesture of friendship that may be the signal for a rally around the Morrow name again. Mrs. Morrow's interest in her husband's promising career was active. She helped him campaign, and she understood his problems. Governor Larson might do worse. It is a decision for him and Mrs. Morrow to make, with the first consideration given the Republican party in New Jersey and the necessity of preventing any development which might throw congress into the confusion of reorganization. — Portsmouth Times.

MY NEW YORK

By JAMES ASWELL

NEW YORK.—The smart hotels have been pleasantly surprised this season by the number of debutante parties booked. Places like the Plaza, Pierre's, Sherry-Netherland, the Waldorf-Astoria and the St. Regis have been shown that there are still pappas and mammas with enough money to see daughter properly launched.

From the St. Regis, for example.

NEW YORK.—When detectives commanded Vincent Coll, accused Harlem baby killer and Bronx beer baron, to throw up his hands, the gangster cried: "It is the law!" That terrified exclamation suggests once more a new uneasiness sweeping underworlders. Police reporters tell me known crooks do not swagger with quite the boastful self-assurance of six months ago. Even the movies cannot keep gangster epics bellowed to heroic proportions in the face of deep-cutting public revulsion and contempt.

What set the shift in motion no one can positively say. But it began about the time "Scarface" Al Capone was arrested. Then something akin to fright swept dozens of dives. If "Snorky" Capone wasn't invulnerable, who could feel safe?

Other factors may have been responsible. The immense, turbid, substrata of society seems at last to have been aroused. Joblessness and financial difficulties are enough. They can't be bothered with gang oppression. The thin, tight wire of public patience appears to be snapping at last.

When the car in which Coll is believed to have ridden roared through a quiet Harlem street one summer dusk a few months ago and left behind five bullet-riddled children writhing in pain, there was such a repercussion of sentiment that one of the large movie houses showing a gangster film attributes a 25 per cent drop in patronage to the tragedy.

From the haunts of gentlemen familiar with machine-gun triggers and prison cells came stories of oaths to "squel" on the perpetrators of the outrage should opportunity arise. The gunmen had gone too far even for their colleagues-at-arms. They might not seek sanctuary in the sacred code of gangdom.

And night before last, arrayed in a suit several tints brighter than the sample worn, I strolled through one of the toughest neighborhoods along the East river. Three small boys took note of my finery and quavered: "Yaa-aa-aa! Yah, gangster!"

Six months ago, from such a source, that cry might have carried the accents of flattery. This time it was razzberries, pure and simple. The heroes have fallen.

DETECTIVE WORK

It is easy to tell out-of-towners in the bright light area. People packed around window displays are almost always natives of Manhattan. People blocking traffic as they gaze skyward at some architectural wonder are almost always ditto.

People who take buses to Chinatown are, nowadays, 75 per cent residents of Greater New York. Outsiders know there is no Chinatown any more. Strangers can be spotted because they are dressed neither in the manner of Paris midnights nor minstrel end men. And, though perhaps I am biased, they seem to not look healthier.

At four gatherings recently conversation has veered to the comment of Miss Edna Ferber, the novelist, upon her arrival not long ago from a European holiday. She called American young people "beautiful young idiots" and criticized them for lack of interest in "youth movements" or political economy, adding that while she "adored" gin drinking herself, she thought youngsters should have, as she had, other and more serious concerns.

EFFECT OF PLAN ON PRESIDENTIAL CHANCES GAUGED IN WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON.—The effect of his plan for the country's economic rescue on Mr. Hoover's presidential future will depend on how the plan works.

This is the Washington reaction. It is a political reaction, but Washington's reactions are all political rather than commercial. For commercial reactions the place to look is Wall Street.

Politicians thought at first that the original moratorium announcement might furnish just the needed impetus to set the national and perhaps the international business machinery again running at a rate which presently would approach normal. It failed to do so.

Considering that evidence, observers are inclined to wait a while now before drawing definite conclusions.

Republican regulars naturally profess absolute confidence. Conservative Democrats are cautious. In point of cold fact, they do not want a pronounced trade revival before next election, but of course they are forced to express good will, qualified only with blame of G. O. P. management for present conditions.

Their leaders, indeed, are chary of pledging their co-operation too warmly—a mistake which Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic leader in upper house of congress, made last winter when he acquiesced in the administration's unemployment relief program, thereby seriously damaging his prestige.

This time both he and his fellow Jeffersonians who attended the White House conference were more careful, emphasizing their agreement with the president merely "in principle."

Even so, there are signs that Representative John N. Garner's popularity suffered from his presence at the conference and especially from the attendant ballyhoo of his flight thither in an army airplane possibly to the extent of jeopardizing his speakership prospects.

Garner will need every vote he can get, including the Progressives of his own party, and the Ultra Progressives, regardless of party distinction, who are not on the bandwagon.

ALL of US

By MARSHALL MASLIN

What Do You Praise?
What Would You Have Others Praise?

The Truth About Ourselves.
Surely, if a man has even a shred of wisdom in him there must come a time when he stops all else and says to himself:

"What do I praise in other men, and what quality of mine do I hunger to have men praise?"

With that double question a man may measure himself, a woman may see what she truly is — either of them dare.

For it takes a fair amount of both wisdom and courage to ask that question of the self and to answer it boldly.

In our hearts or with our lips we praise the things that other human beings do. Even if we do not put our praise into thoughts or words we praise our fellows by the envy that rises like a salty spring within us. If our praise is natural and honest—and not mere flattery for a selfish end—it draws a picture of ourselves that any spectator may see and admire or condemn. If we praise the stupidly ruthless we are like that, too. If we praise vain extravagance we would be as vain. If we praise slyness or rapacity to blind ambition there we stand, too, naked in the slave market for any man to appraise and buy, and our selling price plainly marked. . . . Thus, we give ourselves away.

And in various ways we tell the world what praise it is that pleases us most. We are praised for some trivial accomplishment, for doing the thing that is easiest for us—and we like it. The flush of happiness tints our cheeks, and we invite more and more of that cheap praise and advertise to the world that this is the broad highway to our frivolous hearts.

We do not envy the struggle and sacrifice of other men, we envy the rewards that at last they win. We do not envy the hard experience that tempers character, we envy the glamour and the glory.

So we seek praise for our cheap achievements, though far within us we know that if we deserve praise at all we merit it for doing, even though reluctantly, that dull and painful thing we do not wish to do, but know we must accept.

If we ask ourselves, with hard honesty, just once a year perhaps, "What do I praise in other men and what would I have them praise in me?"—we may discover the truth about ourselves that we need to know and we may move ahead just a step or two.

Serve this menu for dinner or supper. Chocolate nut cookies are most appreciated when sent to the college student—man or woman.

Today's Recipes

Pepper Beef Hash.—One pound ground beef, one cup rice, one green pepper (large), one small onion, six tomatoes or one can tomato soup, salt to taste. Cook one cup of rice, drain and mix with fresh ground beef. Add chopped pepper and onion. Cook and season tomatoes, which are then run through a sieve. Pour tomato liquid or canned tomato soup over the complete mixture. Be certain that all is mixed thoroughly and that the top of the baking pan is covered with the tomato liquid. Bake one hour.

Chocolate Nut Cookies.—Two-thirds cup fat, two cups sugar, three squares chocolate, melted; two eggs, one teaspoon vanilla, one-fourth teaspoon salt, two-thirds cup nuts, three cups flour, one teaspoon soda. Mix fat and sugar. Add rest of ingredients. Drop from spoon on to greased baking sheets and bake 12 minutes.

Suggestions

Roast Pork
Purchase the desired weight of pork shoulder and have the retailer bone the meat or bone it at home. Prepare your favorite bread dressing and stuff the boned meat, sewing or tying the opening. Rub the outside of the meat with salt and pepper, allowing about three-fourths teaspoon salt and one-eighth teaspoon pepper to each pound of meat. Then dredge well with flour and place the meat in a roaster. Add one-half cup water to the bottom of the pan, cover and roast in a moderate oven, 300 to 325 degrees F., allowing three-fourths to one hour to the pound or about three and one-half hours for a four-pound roast. One-half hour before cooking is finished increase the temperature to 400 degrees F., uncover the meat and brown.

Freak Diet Turns Skin

By LOGAN CLENDENINE, M. D.

"Only a short time ago I had the pleasure of hearing an address by Dr. E. V. McCollum, who has done such notable work in investigating foods," an editor of Hygeia writes. "The audience was composed largely of laymen, and Dr. McCollum talked in plain, simple terms that one could understand, even though he were not a scientist. He told how perfectly healthy animals might be fed on a diet that is perfect in every detail except for an almost infinitesimal speck of some mineral or vitamin. If one particular mineral is lacking, the animals would, in a few days time, actually turn a blood red color. If another mineral were not present they would completely lose their reproductive powers. If one vitamin were lacking, their mentality would be severely injured."

That such experiments have a practical application is seen by the following report of a case in a medical journal:

A woman aged twenty-two, in an attempt to reduce her weight, placed herself on a restricted diet for about a year. This resulted in a marked loss of weight and a nervous breakdown, which compelled her to rest in bed for seven weeks. Her diet had consisted mainly of vegetables and oranges.

When she consulted the doctor she had a yellowish discoloration of the entire skin, which had been gradually increasing. After careful study it was decided that the yellowish discoloration was due to carotene. Carotene is a substance found in vegetables, notably carrots, from which it derives its name. But it is also found in golden corn, pumpkins, squash, yellow turnips, parsnips, spinach, lettuce, oranges and the yolk of eggs.

When the diet is badly balanced with an oversupply of these substances, the yellowish color of the skin is apt to result. The condition, called carotemia, was first observed in children who had been put on a high carrot diet.

In the care of the particular patient whose story is told above, the yellowish discoloration of the skin cleared up when the diet was enlarged to include meat and milk and bread and sugar, and potatoes—articles of food not exclusively of the green or pigmented vegetable type.

How To Win Man's Heart

By MRS. VIRGINIA LEE

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: About six weeks ago I met my sister-in-law's brother. I fell for him deeply."

"Now, Virginia, how can you win a man when he is afraid of love? A girl had hurt him deeply. He had gone with her for about five years. Then she left him for another man."

"How can I prove to him that all love is not the same? He is gone now, but will be back soon. Please help me to win him."

"LONELY."

You will have to study your man, Lonely. Learn his tastes and habits. Generally speaking, if you take a sweet, sincere, sympathetic girl who loves a man dearly and is willing to make a happy home for him. Associate her with the man who needs a girl to listen to his tale of woe and who tells him she realizes that there ARE girls, she has heard, who play with a man's heart and then toss it away, but ALL are not like that. Let her show him that she thinks he is wonderful, but do not let her show her love for him too obviously. Let her never tire of hearing him talk of himself and his broken heart, and of offering her sympathy, and nine times out of ten he will ask her to be his solace for life.

J. A. M.: I don't see why you should stay with a wife who is as obviously untrue to you as you are yours. If you can prove that she is the type of woman you say, you could divorce her. The only reason a man would stick to a woman like that would be if he loved her and felt there was some hope that after awhile she would grow to be satisfied with him and his love.

WONDERING CHILD: You can play games when your boy friends come, and you can make candy, pop corn, crack nuts, read, maybe, if you're interested in that. Card games are good, if you are allowed to play them. Backgammon, a, fling, etc., are all good games. Can you play the piano? If you can maybe the boys would be interested in singing some of the popular songs. You can listen to the radio or victrola, too. I think your mother is right about the time a girl of your age should be home. If she is kind enough to let you have boy friends, don't abuse the privilege. And don't pet promiscuously.

UNHAPPY NANCY: If your parents object to this boy friend, why not let him go? Maybe they know something about him that would make him an undesirable friend for you.

MARGIE: I sometimes think you who are very young have the most trouble, Margie. As to this boy friend who has ceased to be friendly, let him go, dear. Boys and girls of that age lose interest in one friend and take up with another and then it's off with that one and on with still another—that is, generally speaking. You can always be friendly in your manner to him, and when he comes again have no intention of wanting him to be your best boy friend. He'll respond, I'm sure.

"DEAR VIRGINIA LEE: I want to thank you for the kind advice. But really, I am not dramatizing the episodes in my life, for recently I met the boy, whom I turned down. We shook hands and had a talk, and the way my heart pounded and the way he looked at me, I know the love is still there."

"But, as you say, we are both married, and surely I wouldn't think of making him or his wife miserable because of my mistake. I wish them both happiness. My happiness will come some day, I'm sure. But until then I will continue to do all I can for my children's sakes, even though I know my husband is unfaithful. God is good to those who trust in Him, and I'll keep on praying for the happy day which will come to me in the future. FAITH HEART."

You're very welcome to the advice and I, too, hope happiness will come to you soon.

Pretty Leg Worth More Than Face

By GLADYS GLAD

That well-known and popular artist, John Held, Jr., who has been the judge in a surprising number of beauty contests, avers that a pair of pretty legs is worth as much as a modern girl than a pretty face. Moreover, he says that the long skirts now being worn have not decreased the importance of well-shaped legs a single bit. And in my opinion, he's right in every respect.

Just because our legs are no longer on full display, we should not become lax in our care of them. The little Hopalong who thought that the long skirt styles would put an end to her leg worries were, as they now realize, sadly mistaken. Legs now come in for just as large a share of attention as they did in the scanty-skirted days. And the task of keeping them in good condition must be continued just the same.

Those of my readers who complain of poorly-formed legs know well enough that it is no easy task to get their nether extremities into more perfect shape. And legs that have a normal calf, but ankles and knees that are too thin or too fat show only that the knee and ankle muscles have not been exercised sufficiently. Thorough exercising of these muscles will result in improved shapeliness. But the exercises must be designed for these parts exclusively, like the ones listed in my article on "Care of the Feet and Legs." And they must be practiced faithfully and persistently until the defects are remedied.

However, the girl who really wants to have pretty legs can do more than this. She can enroll in some dancing class, and permit the long skirt styles to be put aside for the time being. Such dancing will not only make her legs more shapely, but will also benefit her entire body.

BRIDGE EXPERT HAS CONTRACT RULES ON BACK OF ONE CARD

By DAVID W. CHUTE
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
BROOKLINE, Mass., Oct. 13.—

Goodbye to the familiar bridge table remarks: "Old Lady Luck," and "the cards were against me."

"Thumbs!" Contract rules for the novice bridge player as well as the experienced, which can be memorized almost at a glance, have been developed by Carlton J. Russell, Brookline expert.

Although the system developed by Russell is not exactly condensed enough to be contained on a thumb, the expert claims that the entire code of rules, along with a generous sprinkling of the fine points of the game can be recorded on the back of an ordinary playing card.

"The system," said Russell, "is a tabloid form of informing the player of Contract Bridge in a sort of mechanical way, just how much he can bid on his hand without overbidding, and automatically decides the most advisable trump suit to declare. The chart can be memorized in a very few minutes and is not any more difficult to learn than the alphabet."

"It also takes care of any freaky distribution of the cards," Russell continued. It virtually eliminates the element of luck from the playing of the cards. Two persons who have never heard of bridge or contract, in a few minutes time are able to bid the hands and reach the proper amount that should be contracted for just as efficiently as players with years of experience, using any amount of informative systems of bidding."

Of course, he reminded, the playing of the cards requires experience.

Russell claimed that the "thumb-nail" chart has been compared with hundreds of "contract" hands published by the world's recognized bridge authorities and not once has it failed. Hundreds of hands have also been dealt at random for tests with the same result, he declared.

In addition to these points, there are some of the other features which Russell claims are covered and quickly memorized by his system—all on the face of a playing card:

The full value of the "contracting hands" are reached with the first round of bidding.

If the contracting side bid their hand full strength, the value being placed by the chart, and two or three overtricks are won, the declarer may be assured that it is not "luck" but poor defense by the opponents.

Should the same be "contracted" for, and the declarer fail, the value of the contracting hands may be quickly memorized, and if the amount bid agrees with the value placed by the chart, invariably the extra tricks will be found possible by perfect defense.

If the hands are overbid, that also may be determined by consulting the chart.

Bowling

Three of the four existing team and individual bowling records in the Recreation League were eclipsed in the Schmidt Oil Co. Red Wing Co. match Monday night, but although the Schmidt quintet established two new marks for team accomplishments, the Red Wings won two of the three games.

The Schmidt team collected a three-game total of 2,920, including a record-breaking single game of 1,094. The previous league record for high team total was 2,845 held by Krippendorf, while the former high league team single game was 1,021, a mark owned by the Red Wings.

The three-game total exceeded that of the Red Wings Monday night by 213 pins, yet the league leaders won the match.

Carl Gannon, of the Red Wings, set a new league record of 246 for high individual game, bettering by one pin the former mark held jointly by Leach and Carl Highley.

The only record that withstood assault was that for high individual three-game series.

Four individual totals exceeding 600 were recorded in the match. Smith had a series of 626, followed by White with 620 and Malavasy with 608 for the Schmidt quintet, while Gannon rolled the 604 for the winners. Box score:

SHARKEY DECISIONS CARNERA

JACK SHARKEY

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Jack Sharkey basks again today in the sunshine of certain popularity because of his one-sided victory over Primo Carnera.

Sharkey fought in the way he really can fight, with the mood is upon him and the sometimes erratic, sometimes brilliant Bostonite.

Primo Carnera, the Italian, was not disgraced. He showed almost unbelievable ability to soak up punishment. He demonstrated courage of fearless kind and even though he was hit hard enough and often enough to tell a dozen oxen, he went down only once.

Man Who Posed For "Drummer Boy" In Famous Painting Gives Its History

(The following article describing the famous painting, "The Spirit of '76" was written by Henry Kelsey Devereaux, Cleveland millionaire sportsman, who posed for the figure of the drummer boy in the painting. —Editor.)

By HENRY KELSEY DEVEREAUX
Nearly fifty-five years have passed since Archibald M. Willard painted "The Spirit of '76." Mr. Willard has passed and so have all who were intimately connected with its creation, except myself.

Probably no painting of an American artist has received such wide and continuous interest and attention as this patriotic symbol of American spirit. The circumstances surrounding its inception form memories never to be forgotten. A short review from my diary may well act as a tribute to that great American whose loyalty and allegiance took life in the creation of the much-coveted "Spirit of '76."

In 1876 Willard painted, among other things, a picture which he called "Yankee Doodle." It was an ordinary sized canvas delineating a Fourth of July Celebration in a country village. An old man in the center beating a drum, with a younger man on each side, the one with a drum, the other with a fife. This painting came to the attention of an art dealer named J. E. Ryder, who, realizing the widespread spirit of patriotism existing in that period conceived the idea of changing the subject from humorous to patriotic — Willard concurring in the idea.

To change the humorous outline to a serious painting, symbolic of patriotism, was a task. However, the real idea as to what "Yankee Doodle" and the men who fied it and drummed it, stood up persistently in Willard's mind. His early days of marching and fighting under the stars and stripes, helped greatly in stirring his patriotic enthusiasm. So the work began.

While Willard was engaged in painting the picture, his father, who was posing as the central figure, became critically ill. When Willard was told that his father was soon to pass away, all thoughts of a humorous picture faded from his mind. His father did not live long enough to see the finished painting. Sorrow and grief added seriousness to the work.

The work progressed. Hugh Mosher, a Civil War veteran and the best fife in Ohio, was engaged to pose as the fife. It is said that no patriotic gathering near Wellington was considered complete without Mosher and his fife. Brave, patriotic he represented a perfect specimen of heroic attributes and the famous work was perfect to share. Mosher not only had to pose, but fied continuously for weeks while posing for this historic masterpiece.

In the original "Yankee Doodle," Willard depicted three grown men. When the humorous aspect faded he decided to depict his father seriously and conceived the idea of including for his third figure a young lad, symbolic of the spirit of American youth. This decision greatly delayed matters for the ideal subject was not easy to find.

One day, Willard hearing of a competitive drill to take place in the Cleveland Armory, and desiring a subject, attended the exhibition. Why he selected me has never been explained. Maybe an incident in the drill of the Third Company had its effect.

Shortly after the drill, my father told me he had given permission to Mr. Willard to use me as the drummer boy in his picture. I recall a feeling of resentment on my part for that meant giving up afternoon play. However, paternal edicts generally prevail and the hunt for the drummer boy was thus ended.

Visit after visit, day after day passed, the work at first tedious, but slowly becoming interesting. Willard inspired me with stories of the war, with his enthusiasm and with the spirit he was about to contribute to American citizenship. He stood on one leg with the head twisted to one side and shoulders raised and arms outstretched.

While the original "Yankee Doodle" was on exhibition in Boston, a Mr. Brainard, who had charge of the exhibition, suggested changing the title to "The Spirit of '76."

HITLER DEPUTIES REFUSE TO ATTEND

BERLIN, Oct. 13.—Adolf Hitler's Fascist group of deputies, who had announced they would resume their seats in the Reichstag, boycotted the session this afternoon when speaker Loeb reconvened the national parliament.

The Hitlerites announced that they would not listen to Chancellor Brüning's defense of his recent sweeping economy decrees or any other statements by members of his government.

"We will not participate in the useless discussions but we will be on hand when the vote is taken on a motion of non-confidence Friday," declared a Nazi leader.

The police, using rubber clubs, beat back groups of Fascists and Communists attempting to break through a police cordon established near the Reichstag reassembled. Several arrests were made.

PLEADS GUILTY, FINED
Alleged to have evicted members of his family from their home near New Jasper about 1 o'clock Sunday morning, Roy Smith, arrested by Sheriff John Baughn, was fined $10 and costs for drunkenness and disorderly conduct by Municipal Judge E. Dawson Smith Monday.

He pleaded guilty.

THREE ARE FINED
Convicted of drunkenness charges at a hearing in Municipal Court Monday afternoon, Thomas Wright, his brother, Richard, and his wife, Nancy, near Jamestown, were each fined $10 and costs by Judge E. Dawson Smith.

CHILDREN HUNGRY
CLEVELAND, Oct. 13.—With less than half of the city's 121 elementary schools surveyed, acting superintendent of schools Charles H. Lake today told the Cleveland Board of Education he had found 4,685 school children who need extra food daily.

of '76" because at that time in Boston there was a public character, a half wit, who was commonly known about the city as "Yankee Doodle." In some curious way, the painting and this half wit were being confused in the public mind. So Willard consented and the painting was known under the title of "The Spirit of '76."

The work was progressing rapidly now and by the end of April it was finished. And then came the presentation at the Centennial in Philadelphia.

Almost every day I went into the Art Gallery and each time something aroused in me that did not diminish by the frequent visits. There was always a crowd in front of the painting and most of the people had perceptible tears in their eyes as they stood and gazed. Many cried, yet came again and again to look with reverence on that canvas that pulsed so much American spirit. I know, because I was there, too.

Later in life, I stood before the picture again where it now hangs in Abbot Hall, Marblehead, Mass., for which town my father bought the picture and presented it there.

It may be that inspiration borne of an intimate knowledge of the creation of this picture, makes me over-enthusiastic, but then and afterwards, even to this day, when I learned how it holds the interest of all who look at it, the belief is strengthened that the picture was an inspiration, though it might be judged crude in execution by artistic standards.

The determination and fight depicted by the old man in face and figure, without uniform, in shirt sleeves, coat off, sleeves loose, vest open and shirt open at front without collar or stock is symbolic of the patriot ready to fight without purpose or thought of anything but the cause at heart.

The fife, a touch of humor for his, a humorous face, his fringe of whiskers, but a bandage about his head on which blood shows, a twinkle in his eye, and a set look on the face and a decided pose in the figure marching to his own life music. The boy fresh from a loving mother's care and carefully uniformed, his eyes fixed upon his adored grandfathers that he may do all that this loved, gray, and loyal man is determined to do. The wounded soldier in the foreground, his head pillowed on the shell-shattered wheel of a cannon, with heart and strength enough left to raise his cap in salute to "Old Glory." Over them all the flag of freedom, the stars and stripes, back of which comes the first round of cheering troops entering action. It tells the story of the old way, and of the spirit and determination when men fought face to face, each individual a fighting machine to fight for love of country and freedom.

The painting was a patriotic human document that reached the hearts of millions of people and will for centuries to come be an inspiration to further millions yet unborn. Archibald M. Willard has passed. He may not be classed a great artist but in the "Spirit of '76" he painted himself into everlasting fame.

WELCOME, LITTLE STRANGER!

Oyster May Be Sissy But He Tastes Good — And Even Oysters Have Their Pride

THE oyster, lazy sissy of the mollusk family, comes back to the provinces this month.

Oysters, your copy book tells you, in season only in the months that have an "R" in their names. This eliminates the oyster from the mid-west diet in the summer, but permits its use in Brooklyn during the months of Fern, Jerly and August.

There should be an "Oyster Day" to announce the opening of the season, like "Straw Hat Day." On "Groundhog Day," the groundhog gets plenty of first-page publicity because he looks at his shadow.

But now that October is here, the modest bivalve, shyest of all marine life, comes forth to take his place in the limelight on the epicure's table. From now until next spring he will be served up disguised under many aliases, shrouded in strange dressings in cocktails, laid naked on the half-shell, laid away in cracker crumbs for frying, or hung by a string in your oyster stew to be dragged forth to flavor the next bowl at the church supper.

But anyone who thinks the oyster has no individuality is wrong. The blue point, much famed in the best menu literature, is really not a blueblood, as his name implies. He is luscious in any form but has been so prolific and so careless with his ancestry that he is rated among the low polio by other oysters. The Lynn Haven oyster turns up his nose at the blue point. They just simply don't belong to same country club.

The Cape Cod—the Boston Cape Cods, if you please—are to the oyster world what the Cabots are to Back Bay. Call a Cape Cod a blue point and you shock the best oyster traditions. Confronted with a nameless oyster in a cocktail, do you know what you are about to eat?

Can you distinguish between a blue point, a bench, a box, a bushel, a cape, a Canadian, a California, a cat's tongue, a cockscomb, a cove, a dragon, a hard, mangrove, sabbow, a reef, saddle rock, sand, Shawbury, single, soft, thorny or tongued oyster. What, you can't? Then you would be a poor hand to take oyster hunting.

The epicure must be able to tell a Lynn Haven from a catuit, a New York count from a Cape May, a Tangier from a Rockaway and a Cape Cod shell from a Cape Cod mud.

The oyster, expert's say, is a fat lazy creature, often man-fed. In confinement he will eat cornmeal greedily and he often makes his home in artificial beds made for him with stakes and concrete rocks on the bed of the ocean in his natural habitat. He is pleased and proud because he contains 200 times as much iodine as eggs, milk or beefsteak, which accounts in a large measure for the oyster's haughtiness toward the clam.

The U. S. Bureau of Fisheries says Americans eat about 20,000,000 bushels of oysters each year, approximately 300,000,000 meals.

N. Y. STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, Oct. 13.—Most of the active stocks fell off a point or two in the first hour today as the result of the inevitable profit-taking following last week's spectacular advance. The market was dull and quiet rather than weak, only 200,000 shares passing through in the first half-hour, a sharp contraction from the start-off of recent active sessions.
